Be the director of the play entitled, "My Life"

Imagine that you are the director of a movie or play about your life. The whole team is assembled around you -- the set designers, writers, light crew, costumers. And you're telling them what scene is coming up that you have decided on... the next scene of YOUR life.

"Okay, listen up everybody," you say. "In this next scene, I am a wealthy entrepreneur who is going on vacation to Tahiti with the love of my life. We will arrive at the airport in my brand-new dark blue Jaguar convertible, and go directly to our first-class seats in the airplane."

The rest of the crew nods and says, "Got it, boss. We'll get busy on it." And voila, you find yourself in exactly that scene in very short order.

That's the way your life is, or could be. If you gave directions to your Universal Stage Crew, fully expecting them to set it all up for you, that's how it would come about. Don't call your crew back into a meeting with doubts like, "I'm not sure I deserve to sit in First Class... maybe you should put me in the back row of coach." Or, "I don't have the money right now for a Jaguar, so I'm not sure what car we should put in this next scene." You're directing this part, remember? There's no question of deservability, and the stage crew will take care of locating a Jaguar for the scene.

Leave it up to your Universal Crew! You don't HAVE to figure out how it's going to come about. Your job is to just design the next scene of your life, and start practicing your part, imagining how you are going to be as a wealthy entrepreneur, how you are going to look and feel driving your Jaguar convertible, how exciting it feels to be going on vacation to Tahiti. Imagine the clothes you have packed in your fancy suitcase. Imagine the love and happiness you feel with your partner.

I can hear some of you thinking this is sort of far-out. But just suppose that this IS how the Universe designs the next phase of your life, by your imagining and anticipating exactly what you want. And if you look at your life as it is today, and remember what you have been thinking over the past weeks, months and years, can't you see a correlation? Take any situation in your life, whether it is something that pleases you or something that doesn't, and try to remember the types of thoughts you've been having that have led you right to where you are today.

Most people's thoughts rest mainly on the circumstances that are in their current life, thinking about exactly what's happening to them, over and over. And things change very little for them. But we've all heard of or known personally someone who changed their lives in dramatic ways. Ask anyone who has chosen to create something new in their life (new job, new relationship, etc.), and they will tell you that they "just decided to make a change" and it happened.

A few years ago, I decided to leave my job in retail management and go back to college to complete my degree in International Relations. First I had to decide how I wanted my life to change. Then I thought about the steps needed, and started imagining what it would be like to be a full-time student again. I changed my wardrobe (I only needed casual clothes to go to school) and started looking at textbooks online. Essentially, I wrote a new scene in The Life of Suzanne, and imagined my new role.

Since then, I've been through tons of new "scenes," and quite a few new roles. Anytime I get to looking at my life and don't like the part I'm playing or the scene that's playing out, I call a meeting with my Stage Crew and re-write the whole thing.

Putting it into Practice

Just give it a try

Why not just give it a try? Just decide how you would like your life to be, in any area you would like to change. Spend time each day imagining and feeling this new "scene" in your life. At the very least, the time spent in these thoughts will most likely be time more pleasantly spent than what you normally think about. And when you choose to change the things you do and say to line up with what you've imagined, then you're taking steps to bring this new life experience into your physical reality.

Don't worry about "how" it's going to happen -- you've got a whole Universal Stage Crew to handle all the details. And remember to enjoy being the director of your own life!
