Which Path Are You Going to Choose?

"Without a decision, a path cannot be taken."

I read something like that on a website recently, and it got me to thinking about how we sometimes get stuck in an area of our lives and just need to make a decision to change it.

Say you're out on a woodland hike and come to a clearing in the woods. You sit down to rest and drink some water. After a short while, you stand up and look around you at all the possible paths fanning out from this clearing. You have some idea of where these paths lead, without knowing for sure what you will encounter on any one of them.

Which path to take? Well, which path calls to you? With an idea in mind of where you would like to go, or what you would like to experience next, which path seems like the one to get you there?

Life is like that, a series of decisions to be made and paths to be taken. And since we really can't know what will happen along each path, it's the destination or direction that you should base your decision on, not what you think/fear might happen around the bend.

Your Higher Consciousness knows full well that many paths criss-cross, and that you have the absolute right and opportunity to re-choose at any moment. Also, it's part of the process that you will come to other clearings, re-group, and choose where to head next.

But let's go back to that original clearing, because there's one other option we haven't explored yet. That's the scenario where a person comes to a spot and just stays there. Never actually chooses a path to explore. Never actually decides what s/he would like to experience next. Just stays stuck in the exact same spot, sometimes for years.

Does that describe you? Have you been living the same unfulfilling life, going nowhere in particular? Have you endured the same relationships, job, financial situation, unpleasant physical conditions for years, simply because you haven't decided for yourself that you're going to take a different path?

Are you tired yet of sitting in that same old spot?

At any given moment, you can take a look at the paths open to you and choose one. See how it would feel to head in one direction; if you get going down the path, you'll know if it's the right one for you by feelings of excitement or peace, an internal knowing that you're headed in a direction that will have some pleasing outcomes for you. Likewise, if you're on a path that isn't going to please you, you'll have gut instincts telling you to head in a different direction. And it's always possible to halt, take stock of where you are and where you would like to go, and head in another direction.

Surely you've been out in Nature in the woods before. You know how paths work. You start walking down one, and before long you'll see it cross another path, which is your opportunity to decide to stay on the path where you are, or detour down this new path. And you also know that, if you don't like the path you're on and no other path appears, you're fully able to just veer off into the brush and forge your own path. You eventually get somewhere, you realize how much you learned on the journey, and from that new spot you choose which path to go down next.

So what are you waiting for, sitting in that clearing? What do you want in your life? Which of the paths that are appearing to you -- the opportunities that occur to you either in the physical world or in your imagination -- would get you headed in the direction of your dreams? Start on that path! You'll most likely find after a short distance that another path, formerly unknown to you, magically appears that offers a shortcut towards your heart's desire. Or you'll find that, along the path, your desires change and you hatch new dreams, at which time brand new paths appear.

The point, really, is: Get moving. And not moving in circles; choose a direction you wish to go, a dream you wish to head towards, and take that first step.
