This issue is dedicated to my son, McCullen, who graduates from college in New York City today -- and who always looks at things with fresh eyes.

Child Eyes

Have you been around any little children lately to see how they look at life with fresh eyes? Imagine being a 4-year-old and how new and exciting everything would seem. Imagine (or remember) seeing an elephant for the very first time -- what an awe-inspiring experience!

As adults, we get so used to things being a certain way that at times our lives can seem stagnant... very little can seem exciting or even interesting. When was the last time you discovered a new way of doing something, the way children do? When was the last time you looked at your world with Child Eyes?

The real "juice" in life is in thinking about or experiencing something new... learning new information... meeting a new person... seeing a new locale. That's why there is usually a feeling of excitement attached to traveling someplace new, or to starting a new job. Branching out and exploring a new hobby or sport can add juice to our lives, as can thinking about a new concept or idea. Our minds were designed to expand and create -- are you giving yourself opportunities to expand?

If your life seems to be the same old routine day in and day out, try doing one of your daily activities in a new way. Try eating your breakfast with your non-dominant hand for a change. Take surface streets to work instead of the highway, and really look at the areas you're passing through. When someone says, "How are you?" instead of answering in your usual way (which is probably "I'm fine"), choose a completely different response for the day, something like, "I'm fabulous!" Watch how people react differently to that statement, and notice how different you feel when you spend the day announcing that you're fabulous.

There are so many ways to intentionally look at life with Child Eyes -- let your inner child experience some of the delights of this world. Let me know how it goes.

Readers' Section

"Hi Suzanne,

Today, I took your advice from one of the articles you wrote about fun. <That was from "Choosing a Daily Theme" in the April 22nd issue of "Living It Daily".>

I didn't sleep very well last night because I over did it yesterday helping my girlfriend paint her music/reading room.

After I dragged my butt out of bed, I turned on some music and started dancing. If anyone would have seen me, I honestly wouldn't have cared. I would have invited them to dance with me. That's how I started my day from aching/hurting, and changed it into enjoying the moment!"
