Are you being unreasonable?

H.N. from California wrote to me about changing careers and what might be holding her back. She wrote, "I'm just being too reasonable (making up "reasons" for why I can't do something). Leading an extraordinary life means being unreasonable."

Man, she hit the nail on the head. Whenever we are contemplating making changes in our lives that might appear to be wild or weird or impractical, we're often counseled to be "reasonable." Is this happening to you? And can you see how being reasonable is merely the act of making up reasons why you can't do something you yearn to do?

What would happen if you became UN-reasonable -- you quit making excuses for why you can't do something, and start looking for ways to make your dreams come true? If you ask the right question of the Universal Google System (remember that from a few issues ago?), you will be provided with avenues and ideas to move your dream toward manifestation.

Ask yourself, "How can I make this career change work?" or "What steps will move me toward my dream?" and then watch for the ideas and hunches that come to you from your own Inner Guidance.

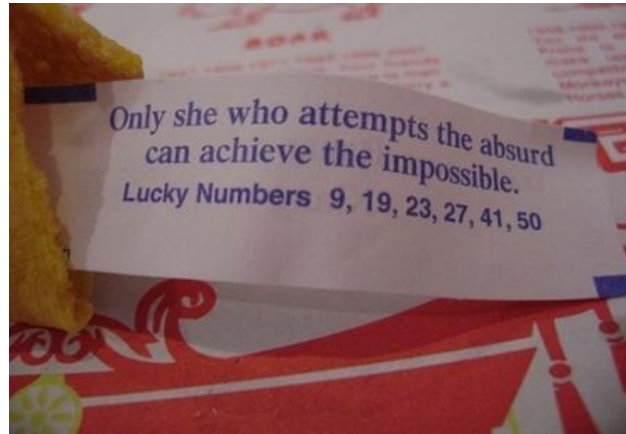

Live unreasonably!
